

Videolocity International Inc. (VCTY) Targets US Video Rental Company; Secondary Merger

—Filing—

HENDERSON, NV, March 22, 2010—Videolocity International, Inc. (VCTY; <http://www.videointernationalcorp.com>) is currently in final merger discussions with a USA based, video rental company.

This US video company started its operations in 1998. The company started as multi-chain video store and was acquired by a home delivery video service in 2006. The company owns proprietary software, which allows it to integrate DVD kiosk technology with regional, same-day-delivery options. The company today refocuses its appeal to take advantage of current market conditions.

The current climate in the video industry is in flux. The once strong retail rental stores are losing market share to home delivery and kiosk solutions. Today's success of Netflix' business model also faces the growing concern of the United States Postal Service ending its Saturday service.

The merger candidate plans to provide locally-ran kiosks and provide same-day local delivery (via delivery drivers) for a monthly subscription and/or one-day rental price. As the world economy continues to rebound, the company's local concept ties in well with the current push aiming towards the small communities as much more economically feasible, and with the support the local community and local advertising programs receive.

This second merger company will represent a smaller share of VCTY as the merger negotiations with the China-based hydroelectric utility as the primary candidate continue.

The company will update its followers on all progress regarding these mergers and all other vital information worth sharing.
